"GREENING" INDUSTRIAL PARKS

In the context where manufacturing enterprises need to implement "greening" initiatives and obtain green certifications for export, IPs & EZs in the city are also gradually improving and vigorously transitioning to clean energy to meet integration requirements, ensure sustainable development, achieve green growth objectives.

Investment in renewable energy

Sao Do Group (the investor of Nam Dinh Vu IP) has signed a cooperation agreement to invest in developing large-scale rooftop solar power systems in Nam Dinh Vu IP, with a total expected capacity of 50 MW for Phase 1 and hundreds of MW for Phase 2. Previously, the Group also signed cooperation agreements to invest in rooftop solar power, aiming to complete 50 MW of rooftop solar power in the first phase by mid-2024, achieve 200 MW by 2025, and 700 MW by 2030.

To achieve green growth objectives

The city has recently piloted the transformation of Nam Cau Kien IP and DEEP C IP from traditional models to eco-IPs, integrating industrial activities with environmental protection and improving the quality of life for the surrounding community. Nam Cau Kien IP allocates over 31% of its area for greenery. Currently, this IP is being evaluated by experts as one of the most eco-friendly IPs, meeting many criteria of eco-IPs. As for DEEP C IP, the investor has implemented a solar energy project on customers' rooftops, conducted a wind power project trial run, and plans to replace all gasoline and diesel waste collection vehicles with electric vehicles.

HEZA organized a conference to hear presentations on the conceptual ideas and overall planning designs for the Southern Coastal EZ of Hai Phong, with the presence of the city's highest leadership. According to representatives from Omgeving (Belgium), the key ideas in the overall planning design of the Southern Coastal EZ include four elements: Green circularity; multi-modal connectivity; smart industrial network; and a destination for dynamic living. Accordingly, the EZ will feature dynamic projects such as the Tien Lang International Airport, Nam Do Son Port, IPs, clusters, new urban areas, indigenous residential areas, and agricultural areas, meeting the requirements of green and sustainable development. This idea has received unanimous approval and high praise from the city's leadership as well as various departments and sectors.

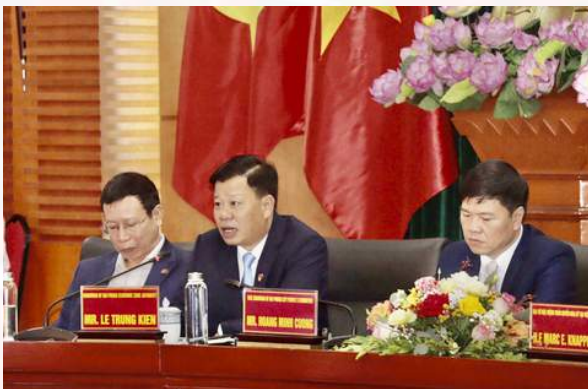

Mr. Le Trung Kien, Head of HEZA, affirmed: "The city always encourages investors to focus on developing eco-IP models, promoting sustainable and highly efficient IP development. Currently, Hai Phong's IPs are all invested in technical infrastructure projects to protect the environment, meeting international standards; encouraging investors to increase the use of renewable energy sources, such as wind energy and rooftop solar energy; and utilize environmentally friendly production technologies. Hai Phong is also guiding investors in IP infrastructure to transition their development model towards a balanced approach in terms of economy, society, and environment, ensuring sustainable development and achieving green growth goals."

SEMINAR "ACHIEVING NET-ZERO GOALS: UNITED STATES - VIETNAM, REDUCING CARBON EMISSIONS IN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION IN HAI PHONG CITY"

On January 17, 2024, at City Convention Center, HEZA, in collaboration with the U.S. Embassy in Vietnam, organized a seminar titled "Achieving Net-Zero Goals: United States - Vietnam, Reducing Carbon Emissions in Industrial Production in Hai Phong City." Attending from the U.S. Embassy in Vietnam were Mr. Marc E. Knapper, the United States Ambassador to Vietnam; Mr. Stephen L. Green, Commercial Counselor; Dr. Ananth Chikkatur, United States Agency for International Development (USAID V-LEEP II); and members of the U.S. Commercial Service and Energy Office.

At the seminar, Mr. Le Trung Kien, Head of HEZA, introduced an overview and development orientation of IPs and EZs in the city, along with adapting to and keeping pace with global trends in green transformation. Currently, Hai Phong has 14 operational IPs, which have been invested in synchronized technical infrastructure covering an area of 6,080 hectares, creating an industrial land fund of over 4,000 hectares, with an average occupancy rate of about 60.5%. Presently, the city is concentrating resources and enhancing efforts to transition to green practices, reducing CO₂ emissions in IPs, and moving towards building and expanding eco-industrial park models across the city. Up to this point, Hai Phong has developed two eco-industrial parks, which are DEEP C Industrial Complex and Nam Cau Kien Industrial Park.

The seminar was part of the Clean Technology Strategic Project Fund and was the result of positive and in-depth exchanges between HEZA and the U.S. Embassy in Vietnam, on connecting bilateral trade activities in the energy sector between the two countries as well as issues related to achieving "net-zero" carbon emissions and coping with climate change. The seminar demonstrated the determination of Hai Phong to fulfill the commitments made by the Prime Minister at the COP26 conference. It was also the city's response to the historic call in Glasgow, marking the beginning of a decade of action to change the mindset of everyone to preserve the future of Hai Phong and improve the quality of life for its people. Moreover, the seminar aimed to accelerate the development of eco-industrial park systems in Hai Phong, closely linked to environmental sustainability and circular economy development, green economy, etc., through cleaner production activities and industrial symbiosis in enterprises within IPs and EZs in Hai Phong in particular, and IPs and urban areas in the city in general. The conference not only had significant implications for operational industrial parks but also contributed to guiding and shaping the development of new IPs and EZs in the southern part of Hai Phong in line with the development orientation set by Hai Phong City.

THE SEMINAR "SOUTHERN COASTAL ECONOMIC ZONE: A NEW DRIVING FORCE FOR THE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF HAI PHONG"

On March 17, 2024, at the Vietnam Maritime University, HEZA and the Vietnam Maritime University successfully organized the scientific seminar "Southern Coastal Economic Zone: A New Driving Force for the Economic Development of Hai Phong City".

The Southern Coastal EZ of Hai Phong is set to be presented to the Central Government and is expected to be approved by the end of 2024, with a planned total area of 20,000 hectares. It will stretch along the coastal highway, encompassing the Van Uc River area, the Nam Do Son port and logistics area, and the Tien Lang Airport area, serving as the southern gateway of the city, integrating all five important transportation modes.

The primary goal is to establish a globally-oriented EZ, focusing on high-tech industries, modern logistics ports (relocatable ports to facilitate businesses), and a free trade zone (covering 1,200 hectares). Among them, the planned industrial development areas consist of six zones, aiming to develop according to the green, eco-friendly IP model. These zones will attract high-tech industries, promote clean industrial practices, minimize emissions, and optimize resource utilization to actively participate in regional and global value chains. By 2030, the goal is to become a key driving force of Hai Phong's economy, equivalent to 80% of the capacity of the current Dinh Vu - Cat Hai EZ.

Within the scope of the Southern Hai Phong EZ, there are plans to establish 6 IPs, all of which have attracted interest and proposals from investors. Among them, the City People's Committee has signed a Memorandum of Understanding with VSIP Company Limited to study the establishment of Tiên Lãng 2 IP with an area of about 500 hectares following the eco-IP model. Additionally, the City People's Committee has also signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Northern Corporation and major US ports such as Los Angeles Port and New York & New Jersey Port to develop a large-scale seaport, airport, urban, industrial, energy, and logistics complex with a scale of 5 - 10 billion USD.

HEZA is currently coordinating with investors to implement the required procedures according to regulations. Once these projects are completed, they will become crucial drivers for the development of the EZ and the entire Red River Delta region. Accordingly, the Southern EZ is oriented towards becoming an eco-friendly, circular, dynamic, and sustainable economic zone; a multi-modal connectivity hub; a smart industrial network; a modern, dynamic urban-service system; while still respecting cultural identity and connecting with existing areas. This will be the first economic zone in the country to have a Free Trade Zone (FTZ) and be a green economic zone.

At the opening ceremony of the scientific conference, Associate Professor, PhD. Pham Xuan Duong, Rector of the Vietnam Maritime University, shared: the university has continuously developed and grown, becoming a center for training high-quality human resources, scientific research, and technology transfer for the country and the region; making significant contributions to the educational and training development of the transportation sector in particular, and the overall national economy, in order to successfully implement the homeland's strategy for developing the maritime economy. As one of the key national universities located in the city of Hai Phong,

The Vietnam Maritime University always identifies its role and responsibility towards the economic development of the city, actively participating in the construction and formation of the coastal EZ in the southern part of the city. It has specific programs and plans in place for training human resources to serve the development needs of IPs and EZs in Hai Phong currently, as well as those in the southern part of Hai Phong in the future.

At the conference, delegates listened to presentations on various topics including "The Southern Coastal EZ - A New Driving Force for the Economic Development of Hai Phong", "Developing the Southern Coastal EZ - Perspectives from FDI Enterprises", and "Developing the Southern Coastal EZ - Opportunities and Challenges for the Maritime Ports, Shipping, and Logistics Industries". Delegates emphasized that the establishment of the new economic zone aims to leverage the development potential of the Dinh Vu - Cat Hai EZ, especially amidst strong investment waves from foreign countries into Vietnam.

With its strategic location in the dynamic Red River Delta region, spanning across three key economic corridors, the Southern Coastal EZ of Hai Phong plays a crucial role in connecting with neighboring EZs, forming a chain of coastal EZs, and driving development for the entire region. Delegates also discussed and proposed development plans for the Southern Coastal EZ, including industrial zone development, urban development, transportation connectivity, green spaces, Nam Do Son Port, the Northern EZ of the Van Uc River, Tien Lang Airport, and forest ecosystem preservation. Furthermore, they outlined development timelines, estimated budgets, and implementation solutions for each phase of the plan.

At the closing and conclusion of the conference, representing the leadership of Hai Phong City, Le Trung Kien, Head HEZA, expressed gratitude for the enthusiastic support, cooperation, and contributions of the Vietnam Maritime University, former leaders of Hai Phong City, government agencies, and businesses, which greatly contributed to the success of the conference. He also acknowledged and welcomed the important suggestions and contributions of the delegates, who proposed numerous significant solutions. These suggestions will be taken into account and incorporated into the development plan for the Southern Coastal Economic Zone of Hai Phong, which will be submitted to the Government in May.
